If John F. Kennedy Had Lived...

"The President (Kennedy) told Mansfield that he had been having second thoughts about Mansfield's argument and that now he agreed with the senator's thinking on the need for a completemilitary withdrawal from Vietnam.

"After Mansfield left the office, the President told me he had made up his mind that after his re-election he would take the risk of unpopularity and make a complete withdrawal. . . 'In 1965 I'll be damned everywhere as a Communist appeaser. But I don't care."

> From a magazine article by Kenneth P. O'Donnell. close aide to President. John F. Kennedy.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2-John F. Kennedy decided in 1963 that he would pull all U.S. forces out of Vietnam after his anticipated re-election in 1964, according to Kenneth P. O'Donnell, one of the late President's most trusted associates. The report was confirmed by Senate Majority Leader Mike Jansfield. Sen. Mansfield said in an interview that he was convinccarried out the withdrawal if he had lived. The Montana Democrat emphasized: "That's. what he indicated to me that he

How Robert Kennedy One 'Double-Crossed' Johnson

By Warren Rogers ir.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.— When Lyndon B. Johnson was Vice-President, he often grumbled about being bypassed, ignored, sidetracked ouble-crossed and otherwise pushed around by the Kennedys.

New Light On Kennedy Viet Policy

(Continued from Page 1) nell said the general, during a private three-hour lunch at the White House in 1961, implored the President to avoid plored the Fresident to avoid a military buildup in Vietzam or any part of the Asian mainland because he felt the "domino theory was ridiculous in a nuclear age."

However, it was Sen. Mansfield who was most responsible for persuading Mr. Kennedy that U.S. involvement in Vietnam was a mistake, according to Mr. O'Donneil. Sen. Mansfield said he had no idea whether President Johnson, who started the massive U.S. buildup in Vietnam in 1965, had known of Mr. Kennedy'e plans.

Mr. O'Donnell's disclosure undercuts Mr. Johnson's re-peated assertions that he was continuing in Vietnam the poli-cies inherited from his imme-diate predecessors, Mr. Kennedy and Dwight D. Eisenhower.

President Nixon has said much the same thing in defense of his Vietnam policies. Sen. Mansfield first communicated his misgivings about Vietnam to Mr. Kennedy in a still secret report following a trip he made at the President's request late in 1962. Sen. Mansfield personally delivered the report to the President as they were cruising in a presidential yacht off Pahn Beach, Fla., on Dec. 24 of that year. According to Mr. O'Donnell, the report angered Mr. Kennedy. "I got angry with Mike for disagracing with our policy so completely and I got angry with myself because I found myself agreeing with him," Mr. O'Don-nell quoted the President as

"Yes, be was angry," Sen. Mansfield said, "I got the feel-ing he was kind of shocked. He read the report and I could see color developing in addition to his tan. I watched his facial expression and it was obvious he was in some turnoul. He said, Well, Mike, it's not very encour-aging. I said. No sir, but that'sthe way I see it. He said, Well, let's eat end we'll con-tinue this later. I stayed overnight at his home and talked a lot more."

Mansfield's Advice

Sen. Manafield declined to reveal what he told the Presiarticle, said the Senate majority leader emphatically advised against sending any more men to Vietnam and also advocated a withdrawal of U.S. forces from that country's civil war. a suggestion that startled the

Yet in the following spring, Mr. O'Donnell said, the President had him call Sen, Mansfield into his office following a breakfast meeting of congressional leaders.

"I sat in on part of their dis-cussion," Mr. O'Donnell wrote. "The President told Mansfield that he had been having serious second thoughts about Mansfield's argument and that he now agreed with the senator's thinking on the need for a complete military withdrawal from Vietnam."

Mr. O'Donnell said the President felt, and Sen. Manstield agreed, that to announce a total withdrawal before the 1964 elections could produce "a wild conservative outcry against returning him to the presidency for a second term." After Sen, Mansfield left, Mr.

O'Donnell, said, the President told him: "In 1965, I'll be damned everywhere as a Com-munist appeaser. But I don't care. If I tried to pull out completely now, we would have another Joe McCarthy Red scare on our hands but I can do it after I'm re-elected. So we had better make damned sure that I am re-elected."

Debré Reveals Some Thoughts Mao Confided

WISSEMBOURG, France, Aug. 2 (AF).—Chairman Meo Tse-tung, unlike his would-be followers in France, has nothing but praise for France's nuclear deterrent. Defense Minister Michel Debré disclosed today.

Mr. Debré was asked at a news conference to comment on Maoist anti-homb slogans scrawled on a local war memorial.

"Our Maoists know nothing about the true thoughts of Mao Tse-tung," Mr. Debré replied, disclosing for the first time that when Planning Minister Andre Bettencourt met the chairman in Peking last month. Mr. Mao said to him: "You are making a great military effort producing etomic bombs. If I were in your place, I would make an even bigger effort."

New York: A Nightmarish Ordeal Could Be a Preview of the Futur

By Walter Sullivan

NEW YORK (NYT) .- People were crawling about, people were screaming, whimpering, gasping for breath, touching each other, vanishing in the dark, and ever and anon being pushed nif the platform on to the live rail."

It could almost have been a description of the scene early Saturday as about 100 IRT passengers stumbled into a dark tunnel to escape a subway fire south of the Bowling Green station in lower Manhattan. At least one person died and scores were injured. Or it could have been the agony of 1,000 Penn Central passengers fleeing smoke and fire generated by a shortcircuited third rail beneath Park Avence last Monday. Tha words, however, were written by the late E. M. Forster before World War I, in a tale that described the collapse of a totally automated civilization. The story was entitled: "The Machine Stops."

Having lost all contact with basic human aspirations, the civilization, completely subterranean, globally uniform, powered by a central station in France, slowly decayed. Its people, fed nn synthetic foods and breathing synthetic air, offered only perfunctory protest to The Machine, then became used to the fetid air, the increasingly tasteless food, the dimming illumination until the final collapse.

Is this vision of more than half a century ago a preview of our future? In the light of recent events one might almost think so. Last week not only New York but such distant cities as Sydney (where it is winter) and Tokyo (where it is summer) gasped under smog hlankets.

N.Y.'s Signals of Decay

In New York the signals of decay were particularly conanicuous. A subway wreck the previous Saturday, that injured came less than two months after another that killed two and injured 71. Last Monday's Penn Central fire was the second in two weeks that halted virtually all rail traffic from the north and, being in an underground tunnel, it was a nightmarish experience. "My God, my God!" cried a woman as she emerged from the smoke-filled tunnel. "Now I know what hell looks like."

Those stalled in their journeys were often frustrated in reporting delays because of failures in telephone service. Airliners queued for takeoff to an extent unknown a decade ago. Helicopters droned their daily reports of traffic jams on city arteries.

Not only were the streets a miasma of stifling heat and poliuted air, but underground the subways hauled their sweltering crowds at reduced speed because of power shortages caused by breakdowns in generating equipment at a time of heavy demand for air conditioning. (Those wearily bomeward-bound found only one elevator operating where several normally serve, as a powerconserving measure. And air conditioning was curtailed for similar reasons.

The smog accumulated to an alarming degree because of a so-called temperature inversion. Normally, warm air from the city rises into the cooler heights and dissipates, but when a layer of even warmer air lies above, this effect is curtailed and, if there is no wind, the city stews in its own gases,

Working at Cross Purposes

What has brought about such breakdowns in service? Most of the reasons stem from a difficulty that is new to man and only affects the older, more highly industrialized sectors of U.S. society. It is thus particularly acute in the Northeast.

In essence the United States has reached the stage where no one element of civilization can be developed on a large scale without critically affecting other elements. Unless Americans can develop the techniques that some call "technological assessment," and others describe as "systems analysis" or "futurology," the

Great Machine of our civilization will increasingly work at cross

Had there been a rational assignment of priorities a generation ago the railroads would not have been allowed to languish. If municipal transit systems sufficient to replace much urban motor traffic had been developed, air in the cities would still be breathable and traffic jams rare.

Con Ed's Problems

Yet technological as ssessment is far from easy. A single problem may involve interwoven considerations of public bealth, economy, politics and technology. An example is the current power shortage.

With the dawn of the atomic age, nuclear power seemed the ultimate solution. It produced no soot, no noxious sulfur or nitrogen compounds. Anticipating greatly increased power requirements in New York City, the Consolidated Edison Co., in 1962 announced its plan to build a giant nuclear plant in Queens on its Ravenswood property opposite Welfare Island.

The time was one of intense public concern about radioactive fallout. Although the plan called for a gigantic dome to enciose all areas of the plant from which radioactive material might escape, in case of accident, this did not allay public concern. For example, it was suggested that a plane taking off from La-Guardia Airport might crash into the plant, releasing radiation that could endanger much of the city. In 1964 the plan was

Con Ed made other proposals for new plants in the intervening years, but citizen groups concerned about pollution or conservation either stalled them or forced their cancellation. Other means of bringing power into the city, however, are still

For example, by the mid-1970s, the giant Churchill Falls hydroelectric plant in Labrador should be generating more than twice as much power as Grand Coulee Dam. Some will be available for New York, if Con Ed and its customers are willing to pay. the long-distance transmission costs, and acceptable routes for the lines can be found.

Major Plant Is Closed

Meanwhile Con Ed's one major source of nuclear power, at Indian Point on the Hudson, is shut down for repairs, as is one of the giant units at Ravenswood, forcing Con Ed to import power from other systems.

One can argue that Con Ed should have known that a nuclear plant in the city or a pumped-storage station in the Hudson Highlands would be unacceptable and that it should long ago have developed other sources of power. But similar charges of poor foresight can be laveled against all the other "villains" of tha current crisis.

Some critics point out that old, established industries that have been under minimum pressure to innovate have not drawn the top talent. The more brilliant engineers have gone to such glamor enterprises as aerospace and electronics. Meanwhile, ; said, automobiles and passenger trains (apart from re experiments) have changed little since the 1920s except

Half-Hearted Efforts

In power transmission it is charged that efforts to deve exotic techniques, notably the use of superconductors, have half-hearted. Such methods, using supercooled transmission is would be very costly to install, but would make possible movement of vast amounts of power with almost no losses.

At present, however, the need to show a profit inhibits c panies from experimenting with such costly transmission to niques. In fact, the young radicals say that a capitalist, pr motivated system will never be able to make decisions n rational than those that have led to the present crisis.

They see a form of Malthusian principle at work. Indu ss they see it, always presses the environmental and his capacity somewhat harder than either man or the environm will tolerate, just as in the doctrine of Malthus population sure always exceeds the ability of the environment to produce f

Are the radicals right? Or can the nation be railied as wartime, to meet the challenge with sacrifice of momentary pro as well as with its innovative genius? The changes needed bring the Great Machine of American civilization into balance not small ones. Yet upon their achievement hinges the abi of American society to avoid collapse.

Portraying Cuba's Ills

Castro Oratory Softens to a 'Mea Culpa'

By Juan de Onis MEXICO CITY (NYT).-A few years ago, Fidel Cas-tro was promising a washing machine in every Cuban home to free housewives from the washboard. Under socialism, he used to say, the productive ca-pacity of the economy would bring plenty and comfort to all the population and would eliminate canitalism's social inequality in the distribution of goods and services.

Last week, on the 17th anniversary of the start of his revolution, in one of the more dramatic speeches of his rule. Mr. Castro candidly recognized that the centrally planned Cueconomy was responsible ban for scarcities, wasted investments, unemployment and discontent.

"The enemy will say our difficulties are growing," said Mr. "and he will be right; the enemy will say we have problems of inefficiency, and he will be right; the enemy will say there is discontent, and he will be right, and he will there are frictions, and he will be right, and we have no fear of admitting it."

In painful detail, he acknowledged that the issue in Cuba today-11 years after he came to power-was not washing machines, but soap, which has fallen short of production goals and is rationed. Despite construction of two large new power plants, there is an electricity sbortage which in turn has contributed to a serious deficiency in cement production. At the end of the cycle is a building

Mr. Castro's earlier scenario of "revolutionary." progress has been mocked by nonfulfillment of production goals not only in industry but in basic agricultural outpur.

ended last week with an output of 8.5 million tons, a record for the island, but 15 percent short of the target.

The unit cost of this sugar, which involves the labor of 400,-000 people and investments estimated at $800 million in mill equipment, irrigation, transport and agricultural improvements. is certainly far above the free world price of about 3,2 cents a pound at which Cuba sells to Western buyers.

The Soviet Union pays 63 cents a pound, and is supposed to get five million tons of Cuban sugar, but the failure to meet the production goal means these deliveries will not be made.

He Takes Blame

During his three-hour speech Mr. Castro offered various explanations for the Cuban economic performance and confirmed, in some areas, critical observations which have been made by both Western and Marxist observers of how things are run in "the first Socialist state in America." ·

He admitted that responsibility for the poor performance feli on the revolution's leaders. "In the first place the responsibility is my own," he said.
"The people, of course, can substitute me right now if they want to." After this was rejected by shouts of "No! No!" from the crowd, the 44year-old bearded leader made these points:

Trained as a lawyer before becoming a guerrilla chiefeconomic affairs. So was the rest of the revolutionary leadership.

 An exodus of managerial technical personnel since the 1959 revolution had not been adequately countered. "We don't have cadres," said Mr. Castro, referring to competent. well-trained . Socialist · Cuba has faced the United States in open political hostili-ties since 1960 and the Cuban regime has created the bestequipped military and security apparatus in Latin America to control subversion and inter-nal discontent. This is a great burden on the economy. Castro quoted figures indicating that Cubs is spending as much on national security, about $1.2 billion a year, as on education, public health and social security combined.

 Cuba's population has grown from 6.8 million the year before Mr. Castro seized power to 6.2 million now, despite the departure of $00,000 Cubans into exile.

There are no reliable figures available on the per capita gross national product in Cuba but there has been a redistribution of the national income so that the peasant who was very poor before Mr. Castro's revolution now has better access to food and other basic necessities. So, while accepting the truth of some of the criticisms against his administration, Mr. Castro warned his enemies not to expect any major change in Cuba. "These · · · counter-revolutionaries are right about many things except that there is an alternative to the revolution," he said.

Portugal After Salazar: Will It Awake!

By Richard Eder MADRID (NYT).-He did not seek power. When he was named a deputy he went to a single session of the National Assembly and quit in disgust. When he was mada a minister some time later, he tried to resign. Only when that generals in the coup-and-riottorn Portugal of the mid-1920's insisted that he assume total authority did ha accept and agree to remain and remain

The notion of seeking power was inherently offensive to the late Antonio de Oliveira Salazar. It implied an attempt to change the established order, and he was a man whose sense of the sacredness of the established order went back to the theories -though certainly not the practices—of the Middle Ages. And so once power was forced on him, he saw to it that no one else sought it either. He pursued this line for 40 years until 1968, when an unsound deckchair toppled lim to the ground and brought on a stroke from which he never recovered. Last week he died.

In 1928, Portugal was the poorest country in Europe, and highly unstable. Today it is still the poorest country in Europe. It has known peace at home, although in Africa it is carrying on a grinding, costly and stalemated war: Forty years under Dr. Salazar and two under his successor. Marcallo Caetano, have given it a predisposition to stability, but not necessarily the means to sustain it.

"It is an underdeveloped country-with history," Leon Trotsky once remarked. It is hard to say which has bound and frustrated Portugal the most: its underdevelopment or its history. Mr. Caetano knows, and has said, that Portugal needs profound changes. He has also said, and apparently means to stand or fall by it, that he will not tolerate subversion disorder or the imposition of an unfettered system of political free-

flexibility and drive to achieve for-all But can you make real economic and social changes in Portugal; and build up a participating electorate, without far greater convulsiveness than Mr. Caetano is willing to permil? Per capita income in Portugal is only about $460 a year, and this is distributed with vast inequality. There are underdeveloped countries with enough high growth rates. Portugal, weighed down with historical and political inhibition, has the slowest rate of capital formation—basically, investment for growth of-any country in Europe even in proportion to its tiny income.

Educational and health figures also trail the rest of Eutope. It is not surprising that the pressure to emigrate is so strong that restrictions are in force to limit the outflow. The pressure to leave—and scarcity at home-are both increased by the drain of the African war and the claims it makes on the lives of young Portuguese. This is a difficult legacy, and the difficulty is increased by historical and political factors that limit Mr. Caetano's scope in dealing with it. The war, for example. Dr. Salazar bequeathed it to his success a task inextricably linked with Portugal's destiny. Portugal, to Dr. Selazer and to many powerful Portuguess including much of the army-is still a world empire. The clocks in Lisbon's airport show what time it is ir Lisbon,

Angola, Mozambique, Macão and in Goa, which India confiscated years ago. There is no clock showing the time in Brazii, but that is a matter of diplomatic politeness: Portuguese imperialists dream, not of conquering Brasil, but of constructing a great worldwide Portuguese confederation in cooperation with it. Mr. Caetano has decided, possibly reluctantly, that he cannot afford to puncture this dream by shutting down the war and losing the African territo Certainly the army wouldn'

Hiroshima Wants to Forget

By Selig S. Harrison

HIROSHIMA (WP).—"We would like to be left alone," aid the young Japanese businessman. "Oustide people are liways coming, and there is too nuch politics. Somehow, somelay, we in Hiroshima would like o forget."

Kunihiko limura, now 30, elebrated his sixth birthday in Aug. 6, 1945, the day a much emembered. American B-29 alled the "Enola Gay" took off from the Marianas and dropped the first atomic bomb. The whole limura family had gone off to mark Kunihiko's birthiay at the home of relatives 70 niles away.

They came back for a brief, horrified look six days later and very nearly decided never to eturn again. Finally reappearog more than a month after the event, they joined thousands of ther survivors who established new homes and new neighborhoods on the ruins of the old.

only visible reminder of the

the midst of glistening new ofice buildings, humming traffic while we talked on the slane ride here from Tokyo, for limura, owner of a small plastics factory, suddenly ketched the dome on a scratch and and handed the page over with an embarrassed smile. Personally, he confessed, he would like it to remain, since it would be strange for us to pretend that we were just like any other city. I suppose I an never really forget, can

"We were all exposed to adiation, you know, when my amily came back on the sixth lay. We are all afraid that omething will happen to us, ancer or who knows what. We aven't registered, though, be-/sure we don't want all that itention. We want to lead normal life. This is all mix-d up in politics now."

Twenty-five years after the preoccupied with its traumadespite all of its glistening buildings, and throughout the country memories of Aug. 5 still generate powerful emotional undercurrents in Japanese life.

At least three separate memorial meetings will be held in each major city when Hiroshims and the rest of Japan hold their anniversary observances Thursday. Socialists and Communists have held rival rallies annunally since a clash in 1963 over Soviet nuclear testing. Both find the bomb their most reliable rallying symbol among the older generation of the party faithful and are reluctant to share it.

Hiroshims has its own city observance every-year near the

The persistent seritivity of Aug. 6 is demonstrated in the fact that the governing Liberal Democratic party clearly fears its potential as a weapon in the hands of the uitra-nationalist right as well as the left. In past years, the conservative rulers have softpedaled the bomb to avoid playing into the hand; of Socialist and Communist propagandists, who use it to mobilize sentiment against the Japan-U.S, security treaty. Now party leaders are also slarmed at hints of anti-American manipulation of the issue by Okinori Kaya, leader of farright LDP elements.

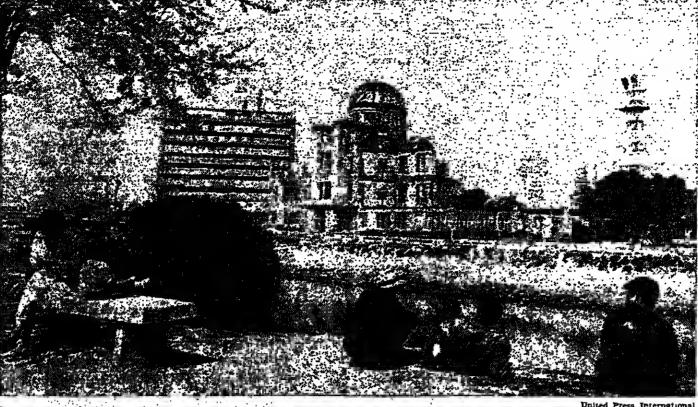

right LDP elements.

Another hitter controversy still much discussed here came shortly before the opening of Expo '70 in March, when government officials quietly removed a dramatic A-bomb film sequence in the Japanese municipal government payliton and watered down the A-bomb portion of a historical tableau in the $17-million Japanese national payliton.

Ridiculing the mild A-bomb sequence now shown in the national pavilion, a former Tokyo University president charged that Expo officials were guilty of "toying with history." The Expo association replied that Japan should not offend the sensibilities of foreign visitors, especially Americans.

In the minds of many key officials, however, the desire to play down Hiroshims reflects a belief that Japan may need to make its own bomb someday and might as well begin getting over its "molear allegy" now. "In Hiroshima, A bomb consciousness cannot be a once a-year filing, as it is in much of Japan. More than $1,350 people are hibaksha (survivors) who directly experienced radiation or a bomb-related injury. Nearly everyone remembers the mush-room cloud, or knows someone who does. (Only 100,000 of the elightly less than 600,000 people in Hiroshima today are postwar newcomers.)

An estimated 105 organizations in the city carry on activities related to the welfare of survivors, medical studies on currently engaged in a monumental effort to reconstruct a precise map and census of the city as it existed before the bomb, block by block and house by house. Three, thousand volunteers and eight full-time investigators are combing the city for information.

"We have no time to lose," says medical sociologist Elyoshi Shimisu, who conceived the project, "because each year the old people are dying off and it becomes more and more difficult to double-check our facts." Some 940 painstakingly sketched neighborhood maps have been submitted by old settlers in response to radio, and TV

A Basic Parpose

One of the basic purposes of the map venture, says Mr. Spinisp, is to settle once and for all how many people were really killed by the bomb. Death estimates have ranged wildly from 64,000 to 240,000, and the mapmakers already have reason to suspect that the higher figures are closer to the truth. In the first 24-block area studied, for example, earlier records showed a total of 903 residents. The reconstruction has uncovered definite evidence that 1,306 people lived in the area and that 373 of them died on Ang. 6 alone.

For the historians, Mr. Shimisu declares, his new evidence on casualties may well hold the most enduring interest, but for many Hiroshima oldsters the project has "an almost spiritual character. They feel that what they are doing will calm the dead souls and help to restore their links with their ancestors. This is a source of very deep satisfaction for all of us still living who knew the old Hiroshima."

Perhaps the strongest organized force consciously seeking to keep memories of the bomb alive in Hiroshima today is the regional schoolteachers unton, a tightly knit, spirited group with chapters reaching into more than 200 schools. The union leaped angrily into action in early 1969 after a survey revealed that 10 percent of 600 students in five Hiroshima high schools did not know the U.S. had dropped the bomb. Another 10 percent gave frivolous answers, with several scrawling that nuclear weapons are kakkoll (groovy). One teachers committee compiled a special textbook for high school students on "Hiroshima" to supplement a cautious, government approved history text, and another group prepared an additional 64-page book for junior high schools. In the year since its publication, "Hiroshima" has sold more than 25,000 copies in Student apathy concerning the Hiroshima legacy is not limited to high schools but is found to a lesser extent even among undergraduates majoring in political science and economics at Hiroshima University.

Fears Survive

While there are still a few victims who pose for tourists with their twisted keloid (scars). most of the worst afflicted survivors keep out of sight, and the only external reminders of the bomb in a bustling, modern metropolis are the dome, the museum and the peace park, all clustered together along a broad midtown boulevard. (The "atomic slum" near the river where many indigent victims huddled for years is thinning out in the face of government redevelopment programs.) As you talk to people here over a period of several days, though, you gradually sense that many of them are hibaksha like my companion on the plane. Mr. signs of injury but are haunted by fears of cancer or other delayed after-effects of radia"More or less every hibaksha lives under great tension and suffers from some kind of neurosis," says Dr. Fumio Shigeto, venerable founder-director of the A-bomb hospital here. "They feel they are unusual people by definition. Most of them lost their families, and all of them live in constant fear of cancer or leukemia. Often they have a sense of guilt that they were the ones spared." Recent medical findings show that among those who were less than ten years old at the time of the bomb and who received radiation doses of more than 100 units, seven or eight types of cancer "have begun to occur at a rate far higher than would be expected in a group still so young." What this portends young." What this portends will only be guesswork in the eyes of scientists, however, until the entire population sample of survivors under study has passed through the age when cancers would normally develop. and this means studies extending into the 1990s.

More ominous, the possibility of genetic mutations resulting from radiation damage has been strongly suggested in recent studies by the U.S.-supported Atomic Bomb Casualty Commission. Researcher Arthur Bloom reports finding "complex chromosomal aberrations" among 39 percent of a group of survivors who were in their mothers' wombs at the time of the bomb, in contrast to a 4 percent result among a comparable group who were not exposed.

Settling Australia: Second Thoughts

By Robert Trumbull

SYDNEY. Australia (NYT).—Australia's immigration policy, which has brought in more than 2.5 million new settlers since World War II, is under attack by economists and social scientists, and the government announced last week plans for an extensive review of the program.

The immigrants who have entered the country since 1945, mostly from Britain and Europe, make up about one-lifth of the nation's population. Economists and social scientists are asking whether it is profitable to continue the massive influx—184,000 in the fiscal year ended June 30—in view of the pressures created or schools and other social services by the arriving familiar on schools and other social services by the arriving families.

The immigration program has also been criticized as "racist" because of the emphasis on attracting whites to keep Australia "homogeneous," as officials say. But others have expressed concern over the dilution of the predominantly white population by the admission of more than 10,000 Asians to citizenship by naturalization since the total racial bars were lowered in 1956.

Growing Enclaves

Many Australians have been disturbed by the tendency of postwar immigrants to concentrate among others of the same nationality. This tendency has created constantly growing enclaves of Greeks, Italians, Yugoslavs, Maltese and others living conspicuously apart from the intermingled English, Welsh, Irish and Scottish people who constitute the bulk of the population.

There is no indication, however, that the impending study will alter the present policy of admitting only nonwhites who possess needed skills and indicate capacity to integrate easily with the rest of the population.

The newest cause of concern has been the increasing overcrowding of major cities such as Sydney, Melbourne, Adelaide and Perth to which the newcomers have contributed substantially.

"Increasingly, the implications [of immigration] must be related more closely to total progress, including nonmaterial and environmental considerations," the Immigration Minister, Phillip Lynch, said in announcing the review of immigration policy in

The survey, which will include the questioning of 10,000 "new Australians" on their experiences, is expected to take a year. It will involve some of the country's leading authorities in economics, social science, urban planning and related fields.

New Controls Urged

The object, said Mr. Lynch, is to "have desirable population levels established, not just in totals but also in terms of their structure and distribution."

Some economists have contended recently that the immigration program requires new controls if it is not to cost more than it is worth to the national economy in future years.

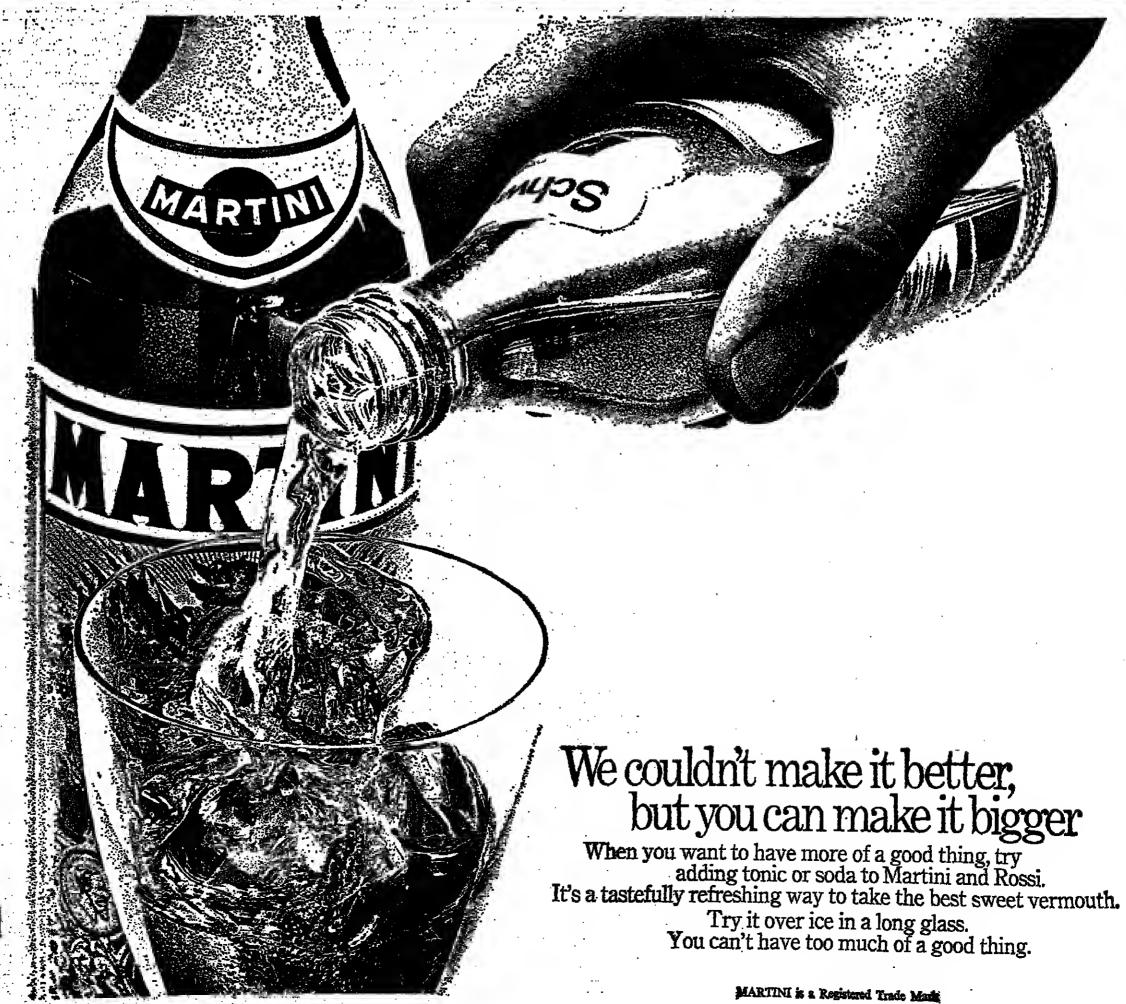

The powerful Commercial Bank of Australia has suggested, in the current issue of its respected publication, Economic Review, that mass immigration has reached a point or diminish-

"In the past few years our real gross national produce has increased by approximately 10.5 percent—low by world standards," the periodical said, "When allowance is made for natural population growth and net migration, productivity has increased only by 2.5 percent per annum, again not a noteworthy achieve-

The social pressures created by mass immigration cause part of the increase in productivity to be channeled into nonproductive services, the periodical said, adding that if the additional social requirements exceeded the immigrants' contributions to the economy, it would generate inflation.

The bank's appraisal brought sharp rejoinder from the Employers Federation of New South Wales, representing businessmen and industrialists in Australia's most populous state.

"Critics of the immigration policy fail to appreciate the acute labor shortage here," said the organization's publication, The Employers' Review. "New South Wales is short 12,000 workers in the skilled male category alone. It has been assessed by economists that the net capital gain to Australia for every migrant who comes here, whether man, woman or child, is about $6,000 in real terms."

INTERNATIONAL

The Strength of Weakness

The spectacle of the Soviet Union solemnly rebuking little Iraq for the latter's recalcitrance over the cease-fire proposals is not without its humor. But the episode does show again that in these days strength has its weaknesses; weakness its strength.

To be sure, Cambodia's lack of military capability did not keep it from the war that was raging around it, nor did Czechoslovakia's relative weakness enable it to pursue an independent course in despite of its neighbors, allies and reputed friends. But weaknese can blackmail strength, as the United States has learned in Korea, Vietnam and even in NATO. And terrorist minorities can dominata cities, even national

This is in part due to moral progress. The days when naughty little states were rebuked by naval bombardments and punitive expeditions has not ended. But the weight of reprobation attending this kind of international discipline cannot be dismissed as easily as in the 19th and early 20th cen-

By the same token, civil dissent that once was swept away by whiffe of grapeshot, execution, jailings and exile, is tolerated to a far greater extent and over a far wider area. Even the Soviet Union, which maintains a very efficient police state, resorts to sanatoria for its more conspicuous dissenters (and demotions for those who fail in power struggles) rather than firing squads and the salt mines

This situation has the defects of its qualities. The assumption that small nations are necessarily good, and large ones necessarily bad is mere myth. Small states, of every political persuasion, can and do behave abominably to their own people and to foreigners—and not only because they are put up to such practices by the CIA or the local Communist embassies. Arson and looting, kidnapping and murder are not inevitably the results of unbearable woes, nor do they always afford even glimpses of the promised land. Sympathy for misbehavior can be only sentimentality gone wrong.

This is not to say that the world should return to a stage of crude repression in the interests of the status quo. But it does suggest that not every use of police power, whether on the international or domestic scene, is without social utility. And even more strongly it suggests that true lawthat is, law which does not simply preserve old evils or act as the weapons of a nation, a class or a system, but which does safeguard lawful and peaceful means of redressing grievancee as well as the lawful and peaceful activities of the community at large-is desperately needed in the world. Perhaps it can only be achieved by the kind of violence so widespread today. Bot the danger always is that the reaction will not be toward the growth of progressive law. but toward that kind which satisfies those who have the biggest and most numerous

There May Be No Other Chance

Israel's decision to accept the American initiative for at least a 90-day cease-fire and for talks under the United Nations is a major breakthrough, coming as it does after a similar and eimilarly mature response from Egypt. Together the two responses permit a halt in the escalating war at Suez, a reprieve from all-out local war and from a great-power collision alike. In the time thus bought and the atmosphere thus improved. diplomacy will have a chance altogether denied to it while the battle raged. For this turn of events, the Nixon administration deserves high marks.

Like Cairo, Jerusalem accepted the American proposal on its own terms, of which the first was the assurance that Egypt would not use the interval merely to prepare a crosscanal invasion. It is hardly possible to believe that the two countries will furlough all their soldiers for 90 days but it is no less plain that any preparations conducted in the battle zone, on either side of the canal, would be a cynical misuse of the cease-fire and would provoke world outcry. What is worse, such close-in preparations would jeopardize movement in the talks to be held under Ambassador Jarring.

Mr. Nixon's press conference declaration that Israel could accept a cease-fire and talks "without fear" seemed to imply a private understanding with the Russians to keep Egyptian military activity within discreet limits. It may have implied as well some kind of American pledge to Israel to help it withstand any military disabilities tbat might flow from a misused cease-fire. Such possibilities are perhaps inherent and implicit in a cease-fire which touches two local countries each with a great-power patron with a large stake of its own in the course of the local conflict.

Israel followed Egypt's lead in making sure that its response to Washington did not prejudice its long-held principles on the shape of an eventual settlement. The Meir government agreed to name a representative for "peace negotiations without prior conditions . . . with the aim of reaching a binding contractual peace agreement." It took on no commitment to the quick and total troop withdrawal which is Egypt's first demand. Ambassador Jarring'e difficult task will be precisely to try to resolve the essential contradiction between the two sets of terms.

It is an open question whether the allparty coalition that has run Israel since 1967 will stick together. Essentially its farright members wish to hold on to all captured territory indefinitely. This is not the view of Mrs. Meir's own party and its other coalltion partners, and nothing could prove the point so emphatically and so effectively as a Gahal decision to leave the government. Mrs. Melr's problems with her extremists invite comparison to Mr. Nasser's problems with his extremists among the Palestinians, Iraq and Syria—with the important difference that Mrs. Meir's are not part of a would-be empire but are part of her own country. The essential matter is, however, that Gahal's defection from Mrs. Meir, like the defection of the extremist Arabs from Mr. Nasser, would leave both leaders better fit to conduct a more flexible, realistic and peaceful-. looking policy.

The cease-fire Israel has endorsed applies only to Egypt. On the other fronts, It demands "reciprocity." Since only a few minor Palestinian groups have gotten into line behind Mr. Nasser, and since some horizon. among the other groups surely will try to spoil a cease-fire, and since Mr. Nasser will come under heavy pressure to support them, a cease-fire is an unexpected and a pause in battle could be a short-time

The answer may lie, if passions can be contained enough to permit one, in confining what fighting there is to Israel and the active energillas. This makes life difficult for King Hussein, but that is his life style.

Egypt and Israel deserve great respect for the very difficult and significant decision they have made to stop shooting and start talking. While the United States can claim a major contribution, we hope it makes the claim quietly. It would moreover, be misleading to think that such a turn could come about without some measure of Soviet cooperation. Now that a cease-fire is apparently close at hand and talks are to begin, the policies of every country concerned must be directed at making the most of this precious interval in the interests of peace and mutual security. The only safe working negotiations. eesumption is that this is the last chance.

Toward a Middle East Accord

Both Mrs. Metr and President Naseer have shown courage and realism in accepting the American proposale for peace in the Middle East. If anything, the president has gone further than the prime minister, for the latter had only the resistance of the small expansionist faction in her cabinet, while the president had the whole Arab world, with all its discord and rivalry, to contend with.

A presidential commission headed by former Defense Secretary Cates and including two former NATO commanders, Generals Gruenther and Nossiad concluded that U.S. interests "will be better served by an all-volunteer force, supported by an effective stand-by draft" and added: "A volunteer force will not jeopardize national security." It reported:

"The majority of men serving today are volunteers and many who are now conscripted would made in pay and other conditions of service . . The budget for a voluntary force will generally be higher than for an equally ef-fective force of conscripts and volunteers but the cost of voluntary force will be less than the cost of the mixed force." There is certainly no doubt that the present draft system is discriminatory. The Indochina war would be less violently unpopular if it were not to a considerable extent being fought by conscripts. The disturbing number of draft dodgers who have fled abroad constitute an unsettled element, perforce hostile to their own gov-

Nixon has begun to move gingerly towards this objective. In April he requested a 20 percent pay raise for noncommissioned ranks

Economists Agree in Expecting Faster Gain In Economy and Less Inflationary Pressure

By Thomas E. Mullaney NEW YORK, Aug. 2 (NYT).-While there may be some disagreement among economists over the amount of stimulus needed - and appropriate - for the recessionary economy in the second half of the year, there seems to be a rather remarkable degree of unanimity among them about the likely performance of the nation's

Those who had been particularly bullish about the gross national product now seem to be scaling down their forecasts a hit at the same time that those who had been somewhat more pessimistic seem to be rais-ing their numbers.

Most forecasters have now narrowed their predictions of the gross national product for 1970 to the area of $977 billion to $980 billion—almost $50 billion more than last year hut with most of the increase represented hy inflation. At the start of year, the band was substantially wider, running from about $965 billion to more than $990 billion,

"We project," he saio, "a rolling readjustment, with capital goods and defense weakening, home huilding and consumer expenditures accelerating, un-employment at 5 1 2 percent in early 1871, price inflation easing moderately, and the hudget deficit large and growing ($10 hillion for fiscal 1971)."

Milton Friedman of the University of Chicago said he eschewed numerical GNP forecasts, but he offered this com-

it now looks as if the actual outcome (for 1970) will be a minor recession on roughly the 1860-61 scale. I believe that we are still in a recession but look for an upturn to begin in the latter part of this year." Robert H Parks of F. I. Du Pont, Glore Forgan & Co. also di. not place a number on the expected GNP for this year but said that he foresaw "a moderate economic recovery to get under way beginning in late 1970 or early 1971, with pretax corporate profits likely to increase by 10 percent in 1971 foilowing a 12 percent decline in

"It has always been our position that a mutual fund, balanced with securities and real estate would, in a declining market, show remarkable stability and could, with skillful management, show an envious profit."

UNITED GROWTH FUND

Now do you believe us?

To July 7th, the Dow Jones industrial average reflects a loss of over 24% in the last year. United Growth Fund enjoyed an increase of 41% in the first two years and a 6% increase during this last year.

It's no accident.

To the contrary, there is a mutually beneficial relationship between good real estate. investments and prime securities:

Balance. UGF's investment objective is long term, stable growth. If it's your objective, too, just mail the coupon below.

mer doldrums and money market insecurity to borrowers cutting back on their needs for money and showing resistance to present high interest rates. The cutbacks in the face of an extending business downturn and the easing in U.S. long-term rates are gaining importance. But Europeans are also developing a jaundiced eye for U.S. corporate initiatives. For example, it surfaced last week that liquidity-squeezed Chrysler was trying to raise $100 million in Eurodollars a plan it then postponed. The funding would have been on the private end of the market, and relatively short-term, but froubled Chrysler is not necessarily the kind of borrower Europe would welcome with open arms at this point. What most market people are looking for is a continuation of the lull in public dollar financing, with persistent talk of a Drsf-class credit trying a convertible, assuming Wall Street holds its recent gains, Trustees have set a meeting for holders of Four Seasons bonds for Aug. 17. The purpose is to give the trustees authority to plead the European case for claims on the

ed so far totaled $5.29 billion. down 6.9 percent from a year ago but up about 9 percent from the first three months of 1970.

In the financial markets last week, interest centered on bondmarket activity as stocks plodded through a generally lackluster trading spell. Stock prices made little headway, but bond values declined. After six weeks of steadily rising prices and falling interest rates, it was hardly surprising that the bond market ran into some investor resistance.

The decilne was so substantial in rates for such a short period of time-six weeks-that it's no wonder investore began to have some doubts.

For one thing, the blg rise in bond prices recently was based partly on confidence that the fight against inflation is succeeding. Indeed it seems to be. but the bond market's confidence was somewhat shaken when the government reported at mid-week that wholesale prices had risen by 0.5 percent in July-the steepest increase in six mooths.

Analyzing Statistics

Some analysts felt the disappointment over the wholesale price statisties was unwarranted, inasmuch as most of the gain was traced to upturns in farm-product prices, processed foods and feeds. What was generally overlooked was that the more important industrialcommodities index showed a less pronounced upward moveonly 0.2 percent, the same as in June.

The bond market's hesitation last week was also caused to some extent by the realization that local governments and corporations would continue to borrow heavily in the months

Even if corporations reduce their spending for new plant and equipment as expected some sources now estimate this year's galn at 5 or 6 percent. instead of the 7 to 10 percept increases estimated earlier this year-they are likely to keep right on selling long-term boods in great volume to build up their liquidity. But more important for the credit markets will he the federal government's ability to keep its budget under firm control.

Wall Street was thus considerably dismayed when the government disclosed that it had incurred a deficit of $2.9 billion for the fiscal year ended last June 30-a larger revenue shortege than was estimated as recently as May. With revenues lower than expected, the deficit is worrisome, for it is realized that, if everything goes wrong in fiscal 1971, the gap between government income and spending could amount to $15 billion. A deficit of that magnitude would have serious inflationary overtones. The stock market closed generally higher for the fourth week in a row but the gains were extremely modest. There were 910 stocks that moved up for the week, while 662 pushed lower and 177 closed unchanged-almost the exact pattern of the preceding week.

Trading volume on the New York Stock Exchange slowed somewhat as a watchful, cautious mood dominated investors. The week's turnover totaled 51.1 million shares, compared with 56 million the week before.

All the leading market yardsticks showed small gains. The Dow-Jones industrial average rose 3.90 points to 734.12; the Standard & Poor 50 gained 0.23 to 78.05; and the Stock Exchange composite advanced 0.15

BLONDIE

By Alan Truscott

As virtually all players use the Blackwood convention or one of its relatives, there might seem to be no excuse for reaching a slam missing two aces. But it still happens in expert play, especially when the bidding has been crowded.

The diagramed deal was played in a recent British international trial. East and West were Bob Rowlands and Derek Rimington of London, who were strongly in contention for the first half of the world pair championship that ended two weeks ago in Stockholm.

This bidding was distinctly abrupt: North's opening bid of one spade was followed by a pre-emptive jump to four diamonds, and South shut his eyes and bid six bearts. This bid assumed that North's opening bid included two aces and was therefore a gamble.

It might seem therefore that South should have bid four no-trump over four diamonds. But most experts would treat four no-trump in such circumstances as a natural bid showing a dia-mond stopper, and South had no desire to be left in four notrump. However, he might have contented himself with a jump to five hearts, a natural mystation to slam.

West led his singleton diamond, and East continued diamonds at the second trick. South would, no doubt, have made the contract by this squeeze except for the fact that Rowlands, as East, had indulged in an unusual and brilliant falsecard. Knowing at the first trick that South held one diamond and only one-West would not have led the three from ninethree-he won the first trick with the diamond ace instead of the queen when the declarer played the jack from dummy.

The diamond seven was returned at the second trick and South happily discarded his losing spade under the impression that West held the diamond queen. When West ruffed, the slam was down

THE VAN WYCK BROOKS-LEWIS MUMFORI LETTERS

The Record of a Literary Friendship-1921-19 Edited by Robert E. Spiller. Dutton. 461 pp. $12.35

Reviewed by Thomas Lask

THESE letters record a friendship of more than 40 years' duration and are unsurpassed in closeness, mutual concern and sustained sweetness. Such em-1_thy between writers is certainly rare, and though in one or two places the chord that joined them frayed a bit, it never snapped. Even at the very end, up to the time of Brooks's death, the letters could not have shown more concern or more consideration. Their relationship endured because both were good men. They had an instinctive aversion to any act or word or gesture that would inflict pain or diminish the spirit of the other. This makes for a certain blandness in the writing, but it did wonders for them as writers.
Each buoyed up the other; each offered assurance, consolation, guidance and occasionally
criticism. They helped one another and others in their circle -Waldo Frank, Lee Simonson, Alfred Kreymborg, Paul Rosen-feld—in dozens of ways. They talked up one another's books, found apartments or living quarters, helped secure grants or jobs, aided in literary projects, signed one another's manifestos and, in short, did all that could be required of them as citizens of the republic of letters.

When Brooks suffered nervous breakdown, Mumford took over like an older brother. physician and family counselor. He must have been a tower of strength to Brooks's first wife. And when Mumford succumbed to despondency. Brooks almost extravagantly assured him of the quality of his work and of its abiding value.

They were human, of course, and when Bernard De Voto attacked Brooks for what he con-sidered a false psychological interpretation of Mark Twain, and when James T. Parrell attacked Mumford for his "fuzzi-ness and obscurantism," both men answered sharply and hastened to the defense of the other. But even then the level of the argument was always high. It is notable, for example, how little gossip there is in the book. Nothing at all about the internal politics of publishing houses, what cliques are being formed and broken, who is carrying on with whom. They complained about their publishers often enough, but they refused to see something Machiavellian in a publisher who did not get behind one of their books or in a critic who castigated it.

not the only bond that united them. Both men felt that they shared r common outlook as to the alue and significance of the American experience as expressed in their writers, painters, architects, political scient-ists and town planners. Both felt that the American past was meaningful, that it provided guidelines to the future, that it worth cherishing

But generosity of spirit was studying. It had been an es by Brooks on the wonder America that had caused M ford to give up a career

England and return home. In contrast to the prevail mood of the 20s, nett Brooks nor Mumford was a 1 sayer. The Waste Land was their symbol. "Life is a gra and a primal adventure," Bro writes to his friend. "O complete your series [Mt ford's "The Renewal of Life" and the whining shades of E Joyce and Spengler and other false poets who have a ed our time will vanish." Mumford in a long letter John Chamberlain insisted the positive line he and Bro had taken in the '20s. Net would accept the narrow e nomic interpretation of An ican literature Vernon Parri ton devised. There was much American life that was discour ing in the years they wrote, they had known past glo no they wanted to restore original luster to what hadcome dull metal on su ground.

And yet in spite of their h purpose, their golden aim, th is a strange deadness, a pecul sterility in these pages. Then a pervasive bookishness as if the plaguing answers can found by consulting another a scure volume or reading and er two or three bundred box before setting pen to pap Brooks and Mumford suffe at the hands of the acad micians and Mumford assert more than once that he wor rather live lean as a writer th wax fat as a professor. (Neve theless, they did lecture, tea and give addresses.) Yet it hard to believe that any profe sor in a college quad could ha been more sheltered than il two men pictured here.

Brooks was always holin back, "I am supplying the miss ing link between the presen and the past," he insisted an his highest praise for Munfor was that he was writing in th tradition of Mill and Carlyle And Mumford was always push ing on to the next book and t the book after that one. It wa a little astonishing to this reader how concerned they wen with run of the mill reviewer and what they said.

This observation is unfair to Mumford, certainly, who has been and remains an activist in a dozen fields; he had ben a member of New York City: Board of Higher Education; has agitated for a more militar anti-fascism on the part of the democracies and has been a s vere critic of urban life a urhan growth. Yet very little this fervor is on view in the pages. As we read, we more a more have the feeling that the is a great world beyond the pages-one that can't be confi book.

Wild Ponies Swim; Tourists Watch—Why?

By Kenoeth Biedemeier

CHINCOTEAGUE, Va. 1WP). -The wild ponies of Assateague Island attracted about 10,000 tourists last week for the 45th annual pony swim to Chincoteague Island—a spectacle that lasted just four minutes and left more than a few wondering why they had

"It was a farce." observed Ralph Rott, a Philadelphia public relations man for the American Baptist Convention.

"It was a waste of time," commented author-journalist Jules Witcover, who brought his vacationing family. "It's so commercialized and there are too many people."

Children Delighted

To be sure, oot everyooe went away disappointed Wednesday. Many children seemed to be delighted to see the poniesabout 125 of them-negotiate the 500 yards of murky water between Assateague and Chincoteague Islands.

Maureen (Beebe) whose childhood pet pony, Misty, put Chincoteague on the map because of a children's book, and movie about the animal, took her two daughters, ages 6 and 6, to the event for the first time.

'I love it. I think it's beautiful," Mrs. Hursh, who now lives in Baltimore, said as she scurried into the crowd with her daughters as the ponies approached the sandy Chincoteague shore.

However, many of the parents grumbled about a 2 1/2-hour delay in the start of the swim. poor vantage points and the muggy 90-degree heat.

"Is that all there's to it?" one womao asked as she walked away from the swim, held oear the Atlantic Ocean on Virginia's Upper Eastern Shore. 58 Animals

On Thursday, the 58 hrown, black and white colts in the herd that swam the channel will be placed oo the auction block by the Chincoteague Volunteer Fire Department. The group owns the ponies sponsors the event and is ru-

$35,000 annually from the roundup. The 3-and-4-foot-tall coltssome of them only a week or so old-will bring about $70 apiece, although some are expected to yield moch less, sevmored to make about $20,000 to eral volunteer firemen said. The older stallions and mares will swim back to Assateague on Friday, roam the pine tree forests, breed and wait for next year's swim.

The money taken in hy the firemen goes to huy new equipment for the town of Chincoteague. Two years ago they bought a new $35,000 pumping truck to serve the community of 4,000, most of whom live in simple, clapboard frame houses.

We don't go out and knock on doors," said Billy Ray Bunting, last year's president of the 50-mao firemen's group, which some suggest might be the richest volunteer fire department in the world. "We work for our money."

On Monday of last week, a dozen of the firemen went to Assateague to round up the ponies, said by local legend to have first come to the marshy island in the 16th century when a Spanish galleon loaded with the animals sunk offshore.

Annual Event

The roundup is believed to have started early in the 17th century. The event became an annual affair (with the exception of two World War II years) in 1924, when the town's volunteer, fire department was organized.

Wednesday's swim was advertised to start about 10 a.m. At 12:26 p.m. the ponies plunged in. The firemen said they waited until the water was calm enough and the tide low enough so that none of the animals would drown,

The ponies whinnied, shook off the water and were herded off for the auctioo. The horde of tourists sped away.

A spokesman for the royal court said later that Snowdon had been going to spend a weekend privately in the country and that Princess Margaret was already at his destination when the accident happened. The British Press Association reported that the girl at the wheel "was either a lady in waiting or a friend who was driving the car for the Snowdons."

"And so, for the last time, good luck and good night, Chet."
"Good luck, David. And good night for NBC News."

With those words, a dry-eyed Chet Huntley signed off his final newscast Friday night ending 14 years as half of the nation's best known television news team. He is retiring to join a resort in his native Montana. He will, however, do occasional commentaries.

Before his traditional good night, Mr. Huntley, his familiar haritone voice quavering just a little, thanked his staff and his viewers. "Be patient and have courage," he said, "for there will be better and happier news one day, if we work at it." David Brinkley, broadcasting from Washingtoo, expressed "a mild envy" at his partner's retirement, concloding, "We'll miss you."

John Chancellor and Frank McGee will replace Huntley oo the program, starting tonight. . . .
